Congresswoman Marie Newman represents Chicago's Southwest Side and surrounding suburbs after defeating an anti-choice, anti-immigrant, and anti-health care Democrat in 2020 - becoming the first woman to represent Chicago's Southwest Side and suburbs in Congress. In her first term, she has already passed five pieces of legislation to boost local small businesses, bring jobs to the district, and improve our aging public transit. A critical part of this job calls for doing the work on the ground, and she's worked in close collaboration with local, state, and county officials to solve complex flooding problems, train delays, and postal issues. She currently serves on the House Small Business Committee, the House Transportation and Infrastructure Committee, and the Congressional Progressive Caucus as Vice Chair for Communications.
